| A single incandescent light bulb gradually illuminates with a vintage map of Burlington in the background. | Voice over: A hundred and twenty years ago, the first light bulb in Burlington was turned on. Located in the town hall, it marked the beginning of the electric age for the young city of a thousand people. |
| As camera zooms in on the map of Burlington, streets gradually illuminate representing the beginning of the electrification of the city. | By mid-century, the town was still only a few thousand people strong, but things were changing quickly. |
| Vintage scenes in black and white including a Burlington suburb, a Burlington street and the construction site of Burlington Hydro Electric Commission building. | In 1945, in the final year of World War II, the city started to boom, and the Burlington Hydro Electric Commission was formed. |
| Vintage light bulb with illuminating map in background | Since then, we've built and maintained 1,600 Kilometers of distribution lines to make sure our community, has the power it needs. |
| Scenes from Burlington Hydro from the present day. Burlington Hydro employees out in the field, followed by employees engaged with the public at the Burlington Hydro community open house. | At the heart of our business is people. That means we're there not just to provide power, but to serve our neighbours, our customers, and our employees. |
| More scenes from the present day. Power restoration crews including repair work after major ice storm | We define ourselves by the care we put into the social, economic, and environmental well-being of our community. |
